Every student, every day, whatever it takes!
"Fire can warm or consume, water can quench or drown, wind can caress or cut. And so it is with human relationships; we can both create and destroy, nurture and terrorize, traumatize and heal each other.

I am sure you have heard, "if you want to succeed, you must fail." In life, failure is inevitable, so why is success not inevitable? Well, success could be inevitable.

There are many routes to success, but one of the best ways to make success inevitable for students is through relationships. The more healthy relationships a child has, the more likely they will be able to recover from failure and thrive. Relationships are the agents of change, and the most powerful therapy is showing kindness and care. The most powerful intervention when a child suffers a setback is human love.

In most narratives, success requires motivation, discipline, and a willingness to work hard. However, these routes to success are only possible if after a setback or failure, the student feels secure enough to move forward. When we fail, we feel a sense of hopelessness, loss of confidence, and self-doubt. We are more likely to repeat the failure if we cannot move past these emotions and feeling.

Good relationships can increase happiness, as well as improve health and well-being, but they are also vital to overcoming setbacks. Studies show that worry and anxiety impair performance. Quality healthy relationships can provide the support and security to overcome hopelessness, loss of confidence, and self-doubt. Good relationships make us happy and release endorphins even during setbacks, that allow for new learning, reframing and reimagining our failures.
Championing Students and their Learning

OUR FOCUS IS ON improving student learning and engagement. In our Home Economics Department, the goals for 2022-2023 are focusing on: 1) to continue to incorporate First Peoples' Principles of Learning in our classrooms and more indigenous content in all courses; 2) to develop meaningful communication between home and school that focuses on incorporating anecdotal comments and proficiency scales in reporting student learning; 3) to refine our proficiency scales and core competencies in the junior Home Economics courses; 4) to work collaboratively using technology to give the Home Economics program a more digital presence.

The departments focus is on helping students become well-rounded individuals. In addition to the development of valuable lifelong practical skills, the curriculum also introduces the students to a wide variety of potential career paths (nutrition, social service, and hospitality management).
